Our Process

1. Wood sorting
2. Drying wood/Klin Dry
3. Productions process
4. Assembly
5. Finishing

1. Wood Sorting

In this process we look for the best wood that can be used to make goods. Of course, wood that is still in log form must be cut first according to the desired shape and size following the design of the goods that will be made using wood. This initial process is a process that can be said to be still rough and requires refinement in the next process.

2. Drying Wood / Klin Dry

In this process we look for the best wood that can be used to make goods. Of course, wood that is still in log form must be cut first according to the desired shape and size following the design of the goods that will be made using wood. This initial process is a process that can be said to be still rough and requires refinement in the next process.

3. Productions process

This process includes forming components, drilling for wood joining construction using either machines or manually. However, to get good results, at least 60% of the wood must be processed using machines.

4. Assembly

After the wood has been shaped in more detail, the assembly process becomes one of the important processes, this process will affect the quality of the product itself. This process requires special expertise because if the assembly process fails, the wood connections will not be strong and will easily come apart.

5. Finishing

If wood is to be made into furniture products, the finishing process will greatly influence its aesthetics. Finishing will give a new and different appearance to the actual appearance of the grain and color of the wood and this process is the process that is repeated most often.
